Defendants.

SUGGESTION OF ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY

COMES NOW Defendant Harpercollins Publishers, Inc., by its attorneys, Rodey, Dickason, Sloan, Akin & Robb, P.A., and Weil, Gotshal & Manges, and shows the Court that on February 14, 1995, the New Mexico Court of Appeals decided the case of Andrews v. Stallings, No. 15,238 (N.M. Ct. App. Feb. 15, 1995), and suggests that that opinion constitutes pertinent authority on the following issues raised by the pending motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted: (1) specificity in pleading claims for defamation, (slip op. at 9); (2) the inapplicability of the defamation by implication doctrine as applied to public officials and figures, (id.); and (3) the scope of protection accorded opinion under New Mexico law, (id. at 11-12). Because this opinion was decided after briefing on the motion to dismiss was completed and has not yet been published in the New Mexico State Bar Bulletin, defendant is attaching a copy as an exhibit hereto.

OPINION

21 BLACK, Judge.

Ronald Andrews ("Andrews"), Jill Andrews, and Golden Aspen
Rally, Inc. ("the Corporation") filed suit against Raljon
Publishing, Inc., owner of the Ruidoso News, Frankie Jarrell ("Jarrell"), editor and general manager of the Ruidoso News, and Charles Stallings ("Stallings"), a reporter for that newspaper. Plaintiffs sued for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, invasion of privacy, and prima facie tort. Plaintiffs' claims are based upon a series of articles, editorials, and statements that they allege presented false accounts of public proceedings and drew unfair inferences from Andrews' actions as both a member of the Ruidoso Village Council ("the Village Council") and promoter of the Golden Aspen Motorcycle Rally ("the Motorcycle Rally").
After entertaining both briefs and oral argument, the district court dismissed the complaint. We affirm.

I. DEFAMATION

19 Plaintiffs allege that beginning the second year Andrews 20 was on the Village Council, Defendants, "with reckless 21 disregard and malice, published false, unfair and inaccurate
22 accounts of public proceedings, more particularly with respect
23 to the meetings of the Ruidoso Village Council, which accounts 24 have contained repeated claims or innuendo of malfeasance of 25 office on the part of plaintiff, Ronald E. Andrews, all with 26 the intent to injure the good standing of said plaintiff."
27 Plaintiffs further allege that Defendants "negligently, 28 recklessly, and maliciously published defamatory statements

1 relating to plaintiffs Jill Andrews and Golden Aspen Rally, 2 Inc., which statements were understood to be defamatory, but 3 which were false." Defendants' allegedly defamatory statements 4 deal generally with the authors' opinions regarding the 5 operation of the Village of Ruidoso and the use of Andrews' 6 elected governmental position to promote the Motorcycle Rally.

7 Initially, we consider the common law tort of defamation 8 and the limitations placed upon that tort by the First 9 Amendment, U.S. Constitution Amendment I. At common law, a 10 statement is considered defamatory "if it has a tendency to 11 render the party about whom it is published contemptible or 12 ridiculous in public estimation, or expose him to public hatred 13 or contempt, or hinder virtuous men from associating with him."
14 Bookout v. Griffin, 97 N.M. 336, 339, 639 P.2d 1190, 1193
15 (1982). "A defamatory communication may consist of a statement 16 in the form of an opinion, but a statement of this nature is 17 actionable only if it implies the allegation of undisclosed 18 defamatory facts as the basis for the opinion." Restatement 19 (Second) of Torts § 566 (1976) [hereinafter Restatement]; cf.
20 Marchiondo v. Brown, 98 N.M. 394, 404, 649 P.2d 462, 472 (1982) 21 (difference between fact and opinion depends on whether 22 ordinary person would understand words as expression of 23 speaker's or writer's opinion, or as statement of existing 24 fact).

25 In 1964, the United States Supreme Court held that the 26 First Amendment "prohibits a public official from recovering 27 damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to his official 28 conduct unless he proves that the statement was made with

1       'actual malice'--that is, with knowledge that it was false or 2       with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." New 3       York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 279-80 (1964). The 4       Sullivan decision constitutionalized the common law tort of 5       defamation. "It set a single standard for libel suits by 6       public officials against the press in every court in the 7       nation." Robert D. Sack & Sandra S. Baron, Libel, Slander, and 8       Related Problems 7 (2d ed. 1994) [hereinafter Sack & Baron].

9       Sullivan and its progeny are based on the premise that 10      "[i]t is vital to our form of government that press and 11      citizens alike be free to discuss and, if they see fit, impugn 12      the motives of public officials." Janklow v. Newsweek, Inc., 13      788 F.2d 1300, 1305 (8th Cir.) (en banc), cert. denied, 479
14      U.S. 883 (1986). Indeed, the right to criticize public 15      officials "lies near the core of the First Amendment."
16      Landmark Communications, Inc. v. Virginia, 435 U.S. 829, 838 17      (1978). Thus, at least since Sullivan, fiery political 18      dialogue, rhetoric, and public debate have been protected under 19      the First Amendment. See Mendoza v. Gallup Indep. Co., 107 20      N.M. 721, 725, 764 P.2d 492, 496 (Ct. App. 1988). Therefore, 21      the courts have been "particularly assiduous in using 22      protections given opinion by common and constitutional law as 23      tools to shelter strong, even outrageous, political speech."
24      Sack & Baron, supra, at 226.

25      "The actual malice requirement was thought to be 26      necessary, because if the makers of some inevitably false 27      statements about public officials (that is, statements made 28      without actual malice) were not insulated from defamation

1 liability, then there would be substantial danger that the 2 first amendment rights of speakers would be unduly chilled."
3 Arlen W. Langvardt, Media Defendants, Public Concerns, and 4 Public Plaintiffs: Toward Fashioning Order from Confusion in 5 Defamation Law, 49 U. Pitt. L. Rev. 91, 96 (1987). The failure 6 to dismiss an unwarranted libel suit might necessitate long and 7 expensive trial proceedings that would have an undue chilling
8 effect on public discourse. See Time, Inc. v. McLaney, 406
9 F.2d 565, 566 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 922 (1969); 10 Myers v. Plan Takoma, Inc., 472 A.2d 44, 50 (D.C. 1983) (per 11 curiam) (on issues of public importance where even nonmeri-12 torius claim may stifle robust debate, motion to dismiss is 13 appropriate exercise for the court); see also State v. Powell, 14 114 N.M. 395, 398, 839 P.2d 139, 142 (Ct. App. 1992)
15 (recognizing chilling effect of criminal libel statute).
16 Therefore, "every defamation action governed by New York Times 17 Co. v. Sullivan contemplates a threshold, constitutional 18 inquiry by the court concerning whether the publication at 19 issue is reasonably capable of bearing a false, defamatory 20 meaning." C. Thomas Dienes & Lee Levine, Implied Libel, 21 Defamatory Meaning, and State of Mind: The Promise of New York
22 Times Co. v. Sullivan, 78 Iowa L. Rev. 237, 281 (1993)
23 [hereinafter Dienes & Levine]; see, e.g., Chapin v. Greve, 787 24 F. Supp. 557, 562 (E.D. Va. 1992) (mem. op.) (threshold inquiry 25 is whether article is defamatory), aff'd sub nom. Chapin v.
26 Knight-Ridder, Inc., 993 F.2d 1087 (4th Cir. 1993); cf.
27 Marchiondo, 98 N.M. at 400, 649 P.2d at 468 (courts must 28 determine in the first instance whether alleged statement was

1 constitutionally protected expression). Based on this 2 standard, the trial court should determine, at the earliest 3 possible stage, whether the plaintiff can establish that 4 statements regarding a public figure are (1) false; (2)
5 defamatory; and (3) evidence actual malice. See Dienes &
6 Levine, supra, at 281-83.

7 The Sullivan standard applies to Andrews as an elected 8 official. See Garrison v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 67 (1964).
9 Where public figures are involved in issues of public concern, 10 the Constitution contemplates a bias in favor of free speech.
11 This bias sometimes works to the detriment of the right of 12 public figures to obtain compensation for damage to their 13 reputations. See Buckley v. Littell, 539 F.2d 882, 889 (2d 14 Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1062 (1977).

15 It is within this legal framework that we measure 16 Plaintiffs' allegations.

17 A. February 14, 1991

18 Plaintiffs identify an article regarding the departure of 19 the city manager, Charles Norwood, as the opening salvo in 20 Defendants' "pattern of malicious, reckless and bad faith
21 conduct, in both investigation and reporting, with the purpose 22 and effect of defaming the good characters and reputations of 23 plaintiffs." The article rhetorically raises ten questions as 24 to why Norwood might have resigned. Plaintiffs specifically 25 target question seven, "Did you, Mr. Norwood, get tired of the 26 village's appearance of impropriety by having the same people 27 serve on several boards where money switches hands." However, 28 because defamatory statements must be "concerning the

1 plaintiff[,"] SCRA 1986, 13-1002(B)(3) (Repl. 1991), none of 2 the Plaintiffs has a legal basis to complain about the question
3 regarding the "village's appearance of impropriety."

4 In Sullivan, the jury found that readers of a New York 5 Times advertisement could fairly infer that the accusations of 6 misconduct made against the police actually defamed Sullivan as 7 Commissioner of Public Affairs. The United States Supreme 8 Court rejected this finding of the Alabama jury and the state 9 appellate courts that affirmed it, saying:

10 There is no legal alchemy by which a State 11 may thus create the cause of action that 12 would otherwise be denied for a 13 publication which, as respondent himself 14 said of the advertisement, "reflects not 15 only on me but on the other Commissioners 16 and the community." Raising as it does 17 the possibility that a good-faith critic 18 of government will be penalized for his criticism, the proposition relied on by the Alabama courts strikes at the very center of the constitutionally protected area of free expression. We hold that such a proposition may not constitutionally be utilized to establish that an otherwise impersonal attack on governmental operations was a libel of an official responsible for those operations.

19 Sullivan, 376 U.S. at 292 (footnote omitted); see also 20 Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75, 83 (1966) ("A theory that the 21 column cast indiscriminate suspicion on the members of the 22 group responsible for the conduct of this governmental 23 operation is tantamount to a demand for recovery based on libel
24 of government, and therefore is constitutionally 25 insufficient.").

26 This does not mean that the First Amendment should be read 27 to automatically prohibit actions for group defamation, even if 28

1 the group is composed of government officials. See Brady v.
 2 Ottaway Newspapers, Inc., 445 N.Y.S.2d 786, 793 n.4 (App. Div.
 3 1981). However, "[i]n a close case on the issue of whether 4 defamatory speech is 'of and concerning' an individual or the 5 government itself, it should be construed as of and concerning 6 the government." Rodney A. Smolla, Law of Defamation 7 § 2.28[3], at 2-99 (1994) [hereinafter Smolla]. Thus, when the 8 criticism can legitimately be interpreted as criticism of a 9 government entity, rather than a government official, the First 10 Amendment requires adoption of the former interpretation. Id.; 11 see Sack & Baron, supra, at 164-65; see also Laurence H. Tribe, 12 American Constitutional Law § 12-12, at 863 (2d ed. 1988) 13 ("[B]ecause critical discussion of government ordinarily 14 involves attacks on individual officials as well as impersonal 15 criticisms of government policy, all defamation claims of 16 aggrieved public officials must be examined closely in order to 17 close what would otherwise be a back door to official 18 censorship."). The statement challenged by Andrews regarding 19 "the Village's appearance of impropriety" is, on its face, 20 criticism of a government entity and therefore is not a proper 21 basis for a defamation claim by a government official. See 22 Saenz v. Morris, 106 N.M. 530, 534, 746 P.2d 159, 163 (Ct.
 23 App.) (impersonal criticism of government is not libel of 24 government official), cert. denied, 106 N.M. 511, 745 P.2d 1159
 25 (1987); cf. Johnson v. Delta-Democrat Publishing Co., 531
 26 So. 2d 811, 815 (Miss. 1988) (editorial focusing on city 27 council did not defame defendant individually).

28 Plaintiffs also complain about the statement: "And then

1 there's Councilor Andrews who helped approve the members on the 2 Lodgers Tax Committee and their budget, only to receive $3,000
3 from the same tax committee to help advertise his Golden Aspen 4 (motorcycle) Rally, a for-profit corporation." The complaint 5 alleges that this statement "implies malfeasance in office, 6 which is untrue and unjustified." Andrews does not allege, 7 however, that anything in the statement is untrue. These 8 allegations are insufficient. "Truth may not be the subject of 9 either civil or criminal sanctions where discussion of public 10 affairs is concerned." Garrison, 379 U.S. at 74. Thus, the 11 First Amendment requires that "a public-figure plaintiff must 12 show the falsity of the statements at issue in order to prevail 13 in a suit for defamation." Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v.
14 Hepps, 475 U.S. 767, 775 (1986). Since Plaintiffs do not claim 15 that the statements are untrue, the mere allegation that such 16 statements imply malfeasance is insufficient to support a claim 17 of defamation.

18           B. April 22, 1991

19           The Ruidoso News published an article by Stallings titled, 20 "LTC could be the goose that laid the golden egg for some."
21 Without specifying any particular statement, the complaint 22 alleges that the article "inaccurately states facts and 23 declares an inaccurate conflict of interest on the part of 24 Andrews in the performance of his official duties, and further 25 implies misrepresentation on the part of Ron Andrews, 26 individually, in the preparation of the financial statement for 27 plaintiff, Golden Aspen Rally, Inc."

28           Initially, we note that Defendants do not bear the burden

1 to discern how this article has defamed Plaintiffs. Rather, 2 the latter "must plead precisely the statements about which 3 they complain." Royal Palace Homes, Inc. v. Channel 7, 495
4 N.W.2d 392, 396 (Mich. Ct. App. 1992); see also Phantom
5 Touring, Inc. v. Affiliated Publications, 953 F.2d 724, 728 n.6
6 (1st Cir.) (because defendant is entitled to know precise 7 language challenged, plaintiff is limited to complaint in 8 defining scope of defamation), cert. denied, 112 S. Ct. 2942, 9 119 L. Ed. 2d 567 (1992); cf. Smolla, supra, § 12.05[5], at 12-10 26.1 (defamation pleading requirements have "a tradition of 11 greater factual detail and specificity with regard to most 12 elements of the complaint than might otherwise be true in civil 13 actions"). Reading the April 22, 1991 article, there is no 14 statement which is so obviously defamatory as to require us to 15 reverse the judgment of the district court. See Bitsie v.
16 Walston, 85 N.M. 655, 659, 515 P.2d 659, 663 (Ct. App.) ("A 17 defamatory meaning will not be given to words unless such a 18 meaning is their plain and obvious import."), cert. denied, 85
19 N.M. 639, 515 P.2d 643 (1973).

20 Second, the factual statements are true and therefore the 21 "implication of misrepresentation" cannot constitutionally 22 serve as the predicate for a defamation complaint by a public 23 official regarding a matter of public concern. See Garrison, 24 379 U.S. at 74; see also Strada v. Connecticut Newspapers, 25 Inc., 477 A.2d 1005, 1012 (Conn. 1984) ("The media would be 26 unduly burdened if, in addition to reporting facts about public 27 officers and public affairs correctly, it had to be vigilant
28 for any possibly defamatory implication arising from the report

1 of those true facts.")

2 C. September 26, 1991

3 The Ruidoso News published an editorial titled, "Law and 4 order took a vacation." Plaintiffs argue that the article is 5 untrue and "implies disloyalty and malfeasance" based on the 6 statement in the article that: "We don't agree with Ruidoso's 7 mayor and council and Ruidoso Downs' mayor who say that the 8 problems [with the Motorcycle Rally] were no big deal."
9 Plaintiff's challenge to this editorial contains at least two 10 infirmities.

11 First, we again note that this statement does not refer to 12 any Plaintiffs individually, but rather to the "mayor and 13 council." Therefore, this statement is insufficient to support 14 Plaintiffs' claim of defamation against them personally.

15 Second, the statement was advanced in an editorial
16 context, which indicated that it was a forum for the expression 17 of opinion, not the recitation of fact. See generally Smolla, 18 supra, § 6.08[3][c], at 6-28 to -34 (discussing "fact/opinion 19 problem"). Although confusion existed over whether opinion on 20 such public matters was constitutionally protected per se prior 21 to 1990, the United States Supreme Court addressed the problem 22 in Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co., 497 U.S. 1 (1990). That 23 case involved a high school wrestling coach, Milkovich, who 24 brought a defamation action in state court against a local 25 newspaper based on a column that discussed an investigation of 26 an incident in which the coach was involved. The column 27 concluded:

28                         Anyone who attended the meet, whether

1 he be from Maple Heights, Mentor, or 2 impartial observer, knows in his heart
3 that Milkovich and Scott lied at the 4 hearing after each having given his solemn 5 oath to tell the truth.

6 But they got away with it.

7 Is that the kind of lesson we want
8 our young people learning from their high 9 school administrators and coaches?

10 I think not.

11 Id. at 7 n.2.

12 The Milkovich Court refused to recognize a per se "First 13 Amendment-based protection for defamatory statements which are 14 categorized as 'opinion' as opposed to 'fact.'" Id. at 17.
15 However, the Court continued to recognize the truth requirement
16 of Hepps, 475 U.S. at 775, saying:

17 Foremost, we think Hepps stands for 18 the proposition that a statement on 19 matters of public concern must be provable
20 as false before there can be liability under state defamation law, at least in situations, like the present, where a media defendant is involved. Thus, unlike the statement, "In my opinion Mayor Jones is a liar," the statement, "In my opinion Mayor Jones shows his abysmal ignorance by accepting the teachings of Marx and Lenin," would not be actionable. Hepps ensures that a statement of opinion relating to matters of public concern which does not contain a provably false factual connotation will receive full constitutional protection.

21 Milkovich, 497 U.S. at 19-20 (footnote omitted).

22 Milkovich did not, then, eliminate constitutional 23 protection for political opinion, "[r]ather, the Court chose to 24 articulate the constitutional rules in terms of the requirement 25 that state defamation actions be based upon statements of fact 26 provable as false." Smolla, supra, § 6.01[2], at 6-4.1 to 6-5.
27 Moreover, Milkovich's reliance on Hepps furthered the

1 requirement that it is the plaintiff who must allege and prove 2 the actual falsity of the statements, "when the plaintiff is a 3 public official or public figure, or when the statements are 4 matters of public concern published by a media defendant."
5 Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist., 275 Cal.
6 Rptr. 494, 497 n.2 (Ct. App. 1990); see Milkovich, 497 U.S. at 7 16. Thus, after Milkovich, "[o]pinion is not protected per se 8 by the Constitution, yet because opinion can be proved neither 9 true nor false and a plaintiff must prove falsity to succeed, 10 it remains nonactionable as a matter of constitutional law."
11 Sack & Baron, supra, at 213.

12 Whether or not problems with the Motorcycle Rally were a 13 "big deal" is not something Plaintiffs can prove to be false.
14 See Moyer, 275 Cal. Rptr. at 497 (terms "worst teacher" and 15 "babbler" not susceptible of being proved true or false).
16 Under Milkovich, therefore, the editorial statement challenged 17 by Plaintiffs is not actionable.

18 D. April 22, 1992

19 Plaintiffs' complaint also alleges:

20 Stallings stated to others that the 21 Ruidoso Police had been told to refrain 22 from restricting the activities of the 23 motorcyclists, because it might 24 precipitate altercations, which might in 25 turn cause Ron Andrews' (implying the Golden Aspen Rally, Inc.) liability insurance to increase, thereby implying a malfeasance of office or undue influence on the part of Counselor Ron Andrews, and which statement was untrue.

26 Once again, even assuming that Stallings made the 27 described statement and that it was untrue, Plaintiffs were not 28 defamed. Initially, we note that Plaintiffs do not allege that

1 Councilor Andrews or either of the other Plaintiffs told police 2 to refrain from restricting cyclists, so it is difficult to see 3 how any of them are defamed. See Ferguson v. Watkins, 448 So.
4 2d 271, 275 (Miss. 1984) (defamation must be clearly directed 5 toward plaintiff and "not be the product of innuendo, 6 speculation or conjecture").

7 Moreover, although Councilor Andrews might infer that 8 these statements implied misfeasance in office, such statements 9 disclose the factual basis for Stallings' conclusion that the 10 risk of altercations might in turn cause Andrews' liability
11 insurance to increase. Statements recognizable as opinion 12 because the factual premises are fully revealed are not a 13 proper predicate for a defamation claim. See Phantom Touring, 14 953 F.2d at 729-30; Mathias v. Carpenter, 587 A.2d 1, 3 (Pa.
15 Super. Ct. 1991), appeal denied, 602 A.2d 860 (Pa. 1992). "A 16 simple expression of opinion based on disclosed or assumed 17 nondefamatory facts is not itself sufficient for an action of 18 defamation, no matter how unjustified and unreasonable the 19 opinion may be . . . ." Restatement, supra, § 566 cmt. c.

20 E. April 30, 1992

21 The Ruidoso News published an article by Stallings titled, 22 "Councilor J.D. James lashes out at board's power play." The 23 opening sentence captures the theme and sets the tone of the 24 article: "An angry Ruidoso Councilor J.D. James scolded Lodgers 25 Tax Advisory Board (LTAB) Chairman Jay Francis Tuesday for what 26 he perceived as a plan to unseat Convention Bureau Director 27 Kathleen Michelena." In the course of the article, however, 28 Stallings wrote:

1           The plan to unseat Michelena has been 2           rumored around village hall for many 3           weeks.

4           The speculation is that Nancy 5           Radziewicz, a good friend of Councilor 6           Andrews, also a voting member of the 7           chamber, was the heir apparent for the 8           newly created job, which would duplicate 9           Michelena's job.

10          Radziewicz and husband, Michael, are 11          long-time friends of Andrews. They sold 12          their West Winds Lodge to the councilor 13          and, according to a statement Andrews made 14          last year, they still carry his mortgage.

15          Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that these statements were 16          "implying a use of office on the part of Ron Andrews for 17          personal financial protection or gain, which is untrue."
18          However, there is no fair inference that Andrews was doing 19          anything illegal or immoral, only "speculation" that a friend 20          of his might get a job with the convention visitor's bureau.
21          Such a statement is insufficient to support a claim of 22          defamation by a public official. As the Supreme Court of 23          California pointed out when considering a similar claim: 24          

25          The implication that [city council
26          members] were motivated by selfish 27          interest rather than the public good is 28          well within the bounds of protected political debate. A statement regarding
             (1) a public official's business, social, or political affiliations, and (2) how those affiliations seem reflected in decision-making hardly constitutes a libelous charge of bribery and corruption.

29          Okun v. Superior Court, 629 P.2d 1369, 1374 (Cal.) (en banc)
30          (citation omitted), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1099 (1981).
31          Moreover, any implication of impropriety is once again based on 32          disclosed facts, which allows readers to form their own 33          opinions and would therefore not even meet common law 34

1 defamation standards. Phantom Touring, 953 F.2d at 730-31; see 2 Restatement, supra, § 566 cmt. c.

3 The April 30, 1992 issue of the Ruidoso News also carried 4 an article under the headline, "Quick thinking really pays 5 off." This article discusses how Lodgers Tax Advisory Board 6 Chairman Jay Francis called the previous year's budget, "a run
7 away horse" and attempted to "recapture the spirit of LTC 8 funding with new addendums to the LTC resolution." The 9 complaint alleges that the "article states[:] 'Francis had said 10 that organizations like Councilor Ron Andrews' Golden Aspen 11 Motorcycle Rally should not receive lodgers tax money', which 12 statement is untrue, and the article further inaccurately and 13 unfairly states what occurred at the Village Council meeting, 14 implying malfeasance in office on the part of Councilor Ron 15 Andrews."

16 This allegation is, at the least, ambiguous. Are 17 Plaintiffs alleging that Francis did not say the Rally should 18 not receive lodgers tax money or that it is untrue that the 19 Rally should not receive such funding? Defendants are not 20 obligated to guess how this statement is untrue, how the 21 article "inaccurately and unfairly states what occurred at the 22 Village Council meeting," or how it was "implying malfeasance
23 in office on the part of Councilor Ron Andrews." Our courts 24 will not strain to find defamation. See Bitsie, 85 N.M. at 25 659, 515 P.2d at 663.

26 F. May 11, 1992

27 The Ruidoso News published an editorial captioned, "What 28 happened?" The editorial begins: "Ruidoso's Village Council is

1 battling the budget, conducting hearings to form next year's 2 financial plan and chip away at what Mayor Victor Alonso said 3 is an $800,000 deficit." The editorial also asks: "[W]hat have 4 these guys been doing while the deficit creped up near the 5 million dollar mark?" Plaintiffs claim these statements imply 6 "that the council had allowed or approved a budget which 7 resulted in an $800,000 deficit, which is untrue, as opposed to 8 balancing the budget, thereby implying a failure or 9 misrepresentation in the performance of official duties."

10 Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertions, no such implication is 11 required and such statements are not defamatory in the context
12 of discussing the expenditure of public funds by public 13 officials. See, e.g., Kotlikoff v. Community News, 444 A.2d 14 1086, 1091-92 (N.J. 1982) (letter to the editor speculating 15 that plaintiff mayor and city tax collector could be "engaged 16 in a huge coverup" is protected opinion). And, once again, the 17 statements about which Plaintiffs complain relate to actions
18 allegedly taken by the government, i.e., the Village Council
19 and the Mayor, not the Plaintiffs personally.

20 G. June 22, 1992

21 An article by Stallings titled, "Councilor Ron Andrews
22 lines out area law officers" and another captioned, "Councilor 23 misuses his office" appeared in the June 22, 1992 edition of 24 the Ruidoso News. Plaintiffs allege that these articles 25 "misrepresent what occurred at a Village Council meeting, 26 misquote statements made by Andrews, and further inaccurately 27 indicate that the council inadequately budgeted for and funded 28 law enforcement." Once again, Plaintiffs' failure to specify

1 in what particular way these statements were untrue justifies 2 the district court's dismissal.

3 The June 22, 1992 edition of the Ruidoso News also carried 4 a sketch of the new Civic Events Center with the caption:

5 Councilor Ron Andrews' Golden Aspen
6 Motorcycle Rally literature promotes that 7 Ruidoso is building the rally a new home, 8 which also happens to be the new Civic Events Center. The literature also claims that the rally is an official Aspenfest event of the Ruidoso Valley Chamber of Commerce. Chamber Officials disagree.

9 Plaintiffs' complaint alleges: "The statement that the 10 rally is not an official Aspenfest event is untrue, and implies 11 misrepresentation on the part of Ron Andrews, in both his 12 official and individual capacities, as well as on the part of 13 Golden Aspen Rally, Inc." A statement is not, however, 14 necessarily defamatory merely because it is untrue. See Mead 15 y. True Citizen, Inc., 417 S.E.2d 16, 17 (Ga. Ct. App. 1992).
16 In order to be defamatory, a statement must render the subject 17 "contemptible or ridiculous in public estimation, or expose him 18 to public hatred or contempt." Bookout, 97 N.M. at 339, 639 19 P.2d at 1193. Even if chamber officials disagree over whether 20 the Motorcycle Rally is "an official Aspenfest event," neither 21 Andrews nor the Corporation are defamed by such a disagreement.

22 This allegation of defamation also appears to be the only 23 claim advanced by the Corporation. While a corporation has the 24 right to bring a claim of defamation, "[w]hether a corpora-25 tion's standing in the community was actually diminished is not 26 relevant if the publication at issue did not falsely charge the 27 corporation itself with some kind of impropriety . . . ."
28

1           Church of Scientology v. Flynn, 578 F. Supp. 266, 268 (D. Mass.
2           1984). Therefore, this statement is insufficient to support a 3           claim of defamation by either Andrews or the Corporation.

4           H. July 2, 1992

5           The Ruidoso News published an article by Stallings titled, 6           "Taxpayers will pick up tab for rally security." Plaintiffs' 7           complaint challenges this article, arguing that:

8           [The] article inaccurately implies special 9           treatment for the Golden Aspen Motorcycle 10          Rally, in the security plan for it, as 11          compared with other Village events, and 12          further indicates malfeasance in office by 13          "Rally owner and Village Councilor, Ron 14          Andrews", in that he "at no point in the 15          discussion declared a conflict of 16          interest, he voted twice", where in fact 17          there was no conflict of interest, and his 18          voting was lawful and appropriate. The 19          article contains other inaccurate 20          statements and innuendos with regard to 21          security for and the cost of the rally.

22          Merely alleging that the article "implies special 23          treatment for the Golden Aspen Motorcycle Rally" or contains 24          "innuendos with regard to security for and the cost of the 25          rally" is legally insufficient to support a claim of defamation 26          when the matters under discussion are of public interest and 27          involve the expenditure of public funds. The complaint does 28          not allege any of the statements are untrue. See Garrison, 379
U.S. at 74. Further, as previously discussed, whether Andrews had a conflict of interest is "actionable only if it implies the allegation of undisclosed defamatory facts as the basis for the opinion." Restatement, supra, § 566.

I. July 16, 1992

Stallings wrote an article titled, "Where's Batman when

1 you need him?" Plaintiffs again complain that a statement in 2 the article is misleading and inaccurate, and implies 3 malfeasance in office. The statement at issue reads: "In the 4 case of the indispensable motorcycle rally, we both spend and 5 save. The trick is to be sure Andrews gets enough taxpayers' 6 money for his private venture to add to an already handsome 7 profit . . . ."

8 Along with the article's title and its appearance on the 9 editorial page, the use of terms such as "indispensable," 10 "trick," and "handsome" indicate that this is not a factual 11 statement which can be proven false. See Hepps, 475 U.S. at 12 775; cf. Miskovsky v. Oklahoma Publishing Co., 654 P.2d 587, 13 594 (Okla.) (editorial stating that candidate "sunk to a new 14 low" and his words were "despicable and stupid" insufficient to 15 support defamation claim), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 923 (1982).

16 J. August 10, 1992

17 Plaintiffs challenge a statement in an editorial titled, 18 "Looking forward to civic center opening." The editorial 19 focuses on the initial question: "Who can speak 'officially' 20 for the Village of Ruidoso?" In the course of discussing 21 various statements as to when the convention center would open, 22 the editorial states:

23 Wicker recalled that this isn't the 24 first time misinformation has been 25 disseminated about the village's new civic 26 events center. A couple of months ago, 27 Councilor Ron Andrews printed in his 28 motorcycle rally brochure that the village had built the center specifically as a home for his event. Apparently that statement was made without being cleared through the Convention and Visitors Bureau, the village manager or the 1                   council.

2         Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that "[s]uch statements are 3         untrue, and are misleading, and imply that Ron Andrews has 4         misused his official position." Once again, a fair reading of 5         the statements do not require such an implication, and the 6         complaint fails to state a constitutionally permissible cause 7         of action.

8                   K. August 17, 1992

9         On this date, Frankie Jarrell wrote a piece titled, "The 10       truth shall set you free . . . ." The article begins with a 11       quote from songwriter Bob Dylan, then states: "Funny thing how 12       some people are dying to get their names in the paper while 13       others would give anything to slink off into anonymity. Take 14       politicians, for example." Plaintiffs complain about the 15       following:

16         Al Junge wondered the other day what 17         we would write about if we didn't have 18         Councilor Ron Andrews.

19         So, Al, what's your point?

20         How many village councilors ask for 21         and get tax money to promote their own 22         enterprise? We can think of just one.

23         How many councilors helped draft a 24         "special events policy" designed for their 25         own rowdy event? We can think of only 26         one.

27         How many councilors don't bother to 28         declare a conflict when issues involving 29         their business come up for debate and 30         vote--issues like auditing lodgers? We 31         know of one who just happens to be a 32         lodger, and instead of declaring a 33         conflict, participated in the debate and 34         voted against audits, saying he wouldn't 35         vote to have himself audited.

36         How many councilors have gone before 37         the council asking for an amendment to an 38         ordinance affecting land they just 39         purchased? One that we can think of.

40         How many councilors, when they

1 finally declare a conflict, continue to 2 participate in discussions over their 3 request, and even advise the council how 4 to proceed? Just one.

5 And, how many Ruidoso councilors have 6 ever threatened to sue the council/
7 village/themselves? We know of two on 8 this council.

9 We don't make the news; we just print
10 it.

11 Plaintiffs' complaint alleges that the foregoing 12 "inaccurately and unfairly states or represents the events as 13 they actually occurred, and imply impropriety or malfeasance in 14 office on the part of Ron Andrews." Once again, however, 15 Plaintiffs do not challenge the truth of the factual statements 16 but merely the "implication" of impropriety and malfeasance.
17 Thus, Plaintiffs do not state a claim that can withstand First 18 Amendment scrutiny.

19 L. September 3, 1992

20 Stallings wrote an article titled, "Questions remain over 21 motorcycle rally rules." The article begins:

22 Ruidoso residents may have the 23 impression that something happened about 24 controlling unruly bikers this year, but 25 not much happened.

26 Although residents called for the 27 Ruidoso Village Council to institute protections against the violence and destruction that erupted during last year's Golden Aspen Motorcycle Rally, the owner of the event won't have to do things much differently this year.

28 The majority of the article reiterates the alleged conflict of interest between Andrews acting both as an owner of the event and as a Village Councilor who supervises the Lodgers Tax Committee and the police department. Among other statements challenged by Plaintiffs are the following:

1           According to state statutes, no 2 elected municipal officer during his 3 elected term shall acquire a financial 4 interest in any new or existing business
5 venture or business property of any kind 6 when such officer believes or has reason
7 to believe that the new financial interest
8 will be directly affected by his official 9 act.

10         Violation of the provisions of that 11 statute is grounds for removal or 12 suspension from office.

13         State statutes also contain a 14 conflict clause that requires an elected 15 official to disclose any conflict of 16 interest to other members before a related 17 vote and to have that conflict recorded in 18 the official minutes.

19         Andrews appears to have ignored that 20 provision on several occasions such as his 21 votes on lodgers tax allocations that 22 included his own business, and when he 23 vocally opposed any bond requirement or 24 contribution toward police protection from 25 owners of events impacting the village.

26         The article clearly discloses the factual basis for the 27 conclusion that Andrews apparently ignored the state statute.
28 Thus, these statements are not actionable. See Restatement, 1         supra, § 566; cf. Long v. Egnor, 346 S.E.2d 778, 787-88 (W. Va.
2         1986) (assertion that some threatened action will violate the 3         law is nondefamatory).

4           M. Conclusion

5         For the reasons discussed above, all of Andrews'
6 defamation claims fail. In addition, the Corporation's one 7 claim of defamation, which is based on the June 22, 1992 8 article, also fails. Finally, we note that we were unable to 9 find any specific allegation that any of the articles defamed
10 Jill Andrews. Since defamation is personal, a plaintiff has no 11 cause of action for the defamation of his or her spouse. See 12 Gugliuzza v. K.C.M.C., Inc., 606 So. 2d 790, 791-92 (La. 1992).

1           The district court was correct in dismissing Plaintiffs'
2 defamation claims. See 5A Charles A. Wright & Arthur R.
3 Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 359 (1990)
4 ("When the claim alleged is a traditionally disfavored 'cause
5 of action,' such as malicious prosecution, libel, or slander, 6 the courts tend to construe the complaint by a somewhat 7 stricter standard and are more inclined to grant a Rule 8 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.").

9           II. INTENTIONAL INFILCTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS

10          In recent years, public figures increasingly have 11 attempted to use the intentional infliction of emotional 12 distress claim "to make an end-run around the obstacles posed 13 by defamation law's harm to reputation element and its 14 constitutional aspects." Arlen W. Langvardt, Stopping the End-15 Run by Public Plaintiffs: Falwell and the Refortification of 16 Defamation Law's Constitutional Aspects, 26 Am. Bus. L.J. 665, 17 666 (1989) (footnote omitted) [hereinafter Stopping the End-
18 Run]. In Hustler Magazine, Inc. v. Falwell, 485 U.S. 46
19 (1988), the Supreme Court "drastically limited, if not 20 eliminated, public officials' and public figures' ability to 21 employ the emotional distress option to evade the obstacles 22 imposed by defamation law." Stopping the End-Run, supra, at 23 668.

24          Mere insults, especially in the context of a political 25 dispute, do not exceed the bounds of decency. See Koch v.
26 Goldway, 817 F.2d 507, 510 (9th Cir. 1987). Therefore, "[t]he 27 stringent requirements for stating a cause of action render the 28 tort's usefulness as a weapon against pure expression,

1 particularly by the media, rare." Sack & Baron, supra, at 678
2 (footnotes omitted); see, e.g., Conroy v. Kilzer, 789 F. Supp.
3 1457, 1467-68 (D. Minn. 1992) (newspaper article disclosing
4 that fire chief had interests in bars destroyed by possible 5 arson insufficient to support claim).

6 To recover for the intentional infliction of emotional 7 distress a plaintiff must show that the defendant's conduct was 8 extreme and outrageous, and was done recklessly or with the 9 intent to cause severe emotional distress. Mantz v.
10 Follingstad, 84 N.M. 473, 480, 505 P.2d 68, 75 (Ct. App. 1972), 11 overruled on other grounds by Peralta v. Martinez, 90 N.M. 391, 12 392, 564 P.2d 194, 195 (Ct. App. 1977). Extreme and outrageous 13 conduct is "beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be 14 regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized 15 community." Id. (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 16 (1965)); see generally X.E. "Javier" Acosta, The Tort of 17 "Outrageous Conduct" in New Mexico: Intentional Infliction of 18 Emotional Harm Without Physical Injury, 19 N.M. L. Rev. 425 19 (1989) (discussing history and application of tort of 20 outrageous conduct).

21 Plaintiffs claim intentional infliction of emotional 22 distress arising from four specific instances.

23 First, Plaintiffs allege that Stallings requested and 24 received from Andrews copies of the Corporation's 1990 tax 25 return. Plaintiffs allege that Stallings then gave information 26 about Plaintiffs to the IRS. As a consequence of Stallings' 27 "report" Plaintiffs claim that the IRS scheduled an audit of 28 both Andrews personally and the Corporation. Plaintiffs allege

1       that these audits were time-consuming, costly, and stressful.
2       We cannot, however, consider it "atrocious" that Stallings 3       contacted the IRS to report his suspicions regarding 4       Plaintiffs' income tax filings.      Whatever Stallings' 5       motivations, the law encourages citizens to report any 6       suspected violation of the tax laws to the IRS. See Barker v.
7       Lein, 366 F.2d 757, 758 (1st Cir. 1966) (per curiam); see also 8       26 U.S.C. § 7623 (1988) (authorizing payment of fees to such 9       informants). Furthermore, we have not reached the point where 10      a lawful attempt to assist law enforcement agents is considered 11      odious. See Saunders v. Board of Directors, WHYY-TV, 382 A.2d 12      257 (Del. Super. Ct. 1978). Therefore, such actions are not 13      "beyond all possible bounds of decency."

14       Second, Plaintiffs allege that "defendants, and more 15      particularly Chuck Stallings, have repeatedly attempted to 16      interfere with or prevent the 1992 Golden Aspen Rally
17      convention, by making [sic] and reporting that the insurance 18      coverage therefore was totally inadequate for the event."
19       Plaintiffs allege that Defendants accomplished this by making 20      "reports" to the New Mexico Department of Insurance as well as 21      "to public officials and local citizens of the Village of 22      Ruidoso, and to the Naughton Insurance Company," which had 23      previously insured the Motorcycle Rally. It was not, however, 24      "beyond all possible bounds of decency" for Stallings to 25      contact the New Mexico Department of Insurance or Plaintiffs' 26      insurance carrier while attempting to determine if the coverage 27      was adequate. Cf. Freihofer v. Hearst Corp., 480 N.E.2d 349, 28      354-55 (N.Y. 1985) (publication of confidential, but lawfully

1 obtained, matrimonial court files is not outrageous).

2 Third, Plaintiffs claim that Stallings wrote and published 3 an article on July 9, 1992, which reported that "high density 4 development has been proposed for prime property across from 5 White Mountain Meadows[.]" This property had been purchased by 6 Andrews and his wife. Plaintiffs allege that the article 7 "resulted in a protest by an adjacent land owner, who then 8 accused the Village Council of impropriety, and thereby caused 9 repeated confusion and delay in the lawful and appropriate 10 lifting of a village ordinance as to such land, and resulted in 11 a cloud on the title to the property and Ron Andrews' and Jill 12 Andrews' inability to negotiate or complete the sales of two 13 parcels within that property." A zoning request to a public 14 board is, however, newsworthy. See Walters v. Linhof, 559 F.
15 Supp. 1231, 1237 (D. Colo. 1983) (mem. op.). Thus, coverage of 16 such an event cannot be considered "utterly intolerable," as 17 Plaintiffs claim.

18 Fourth, the August 13, 1992 edition of the Ruidoso News 19 carried an article by Stallings captioned, "Councilor Ron 20 Andrews threatens to sue village." In this article Stallings 21 wrote:

22 Andrews failed in his bid at the 23 council meeting Tuesday to delete a 1983 24 provision tied to his five-acre tract that limits lot size to no less than one acre.

25 However, he said he intends to proceed with plans even if the final determination has to be brought before the courts.

26 That would have councilor Andrews 27 suing the village he represents, which could be a bad political move if he intends to run for office in the future.

As a general proposition, accurate publication of newsworthy events does not give rise to a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. See McNamara v. Freedom Newspapers, Inc., 802 S.W.2d 901, 905 (Tex. Ct. App.), writ denied (June 12, 1991). More importantly, even if Andrews' statements were not intended as a threat, reporting his actual statements and concluding that the statements constituted a threat to sue the Village could hardly be "beyond all possible bounds of decency" and "utterly intolerable in a civilized community." See, e.g., Koch v. Goldway, 607 F. Supp. 223, 226 (C.D. Cal. 1984) (rhetorical hyperbole in political dispute does not exceed bounds of decency), aff'd, 817 F.2d 507 (9th Cir. 1987).

The district court was correct in dismissing Plaintiffs' claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress.

III. INVASION OF PRIVACY

New Mexico recognizes the tort of invasion of privacy. McNutt v. New Mexico State Tribune Co., 88 N.M. 162, 165, 538 P.2d 804, 807 (Ct. App.), cert. denied, 88 N.M. 318, 540 P.2d 248 (1975). The tort is generally broken down into four categories: false light, intrusion, publication of private facts, and appropriation. See Moore v. Sun Publishing Corp., 118 N.M. 375, 383, 881 P.2d 735, 743 (Ct. App.), cert. denied, ___ N.M. ___, 882 P.2d 21 (1994). Plaintiffs' claim that Defendants placed them in a "false light."

"False light" invasion of privacy is "a close cousin of defamation." Smolla, supra, § 10.01[2], at 10-3. In the absence of proof of a specific false statement of fact,

1        "[u]nfairness, improper tone, or unfounded implication or 2        innuendo, even though they might sound as though they fit the 3        phrase 'false light,' will no sooner support a recovery for 4        false-light invasion of privacy than for defamation." Sack &
5        Baron, supra, at 565. Thus, public figures involved in matters 6        of public concern must hurdle the same constitutionally-based 7        limitations on false light recovery as apply to defamation 8        claims. See Neish v. Beaver Newspapers, Inc., 581 A.2d 619, 9        624-25 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1990), appeal denied, 593 A.2d 421 (Pa.
10      1991); see also Hardge-Harris v. Pleban, 741 F. Supp. 764, 776 11      (E.D. Mo. 1990) (discussing relationship between false light 12      and defamation), aff'd, 938 F.2d 185 (8th Cir. 1991). "[T]he 13      right of privacy is [therefore] generally inferior and 14      subordinate to the dissemination of news." Blount v. T D 15      Publishing Corp., 77 N.M. 384, 389, 423 P.2d 421, 424 (1966).

16      While we are not willing to accept Defendants' invitation
17      to abolish this version of the tort, Professor Kelso's 18      observation that, "[i]n the overwhelming majority of cases, 19      false light is simply added on at the end of the complaint to 20      give the complaint the appearance of greater weight and 21      importance[,]" appears to be apropos in the present case. J.
22      Clark Kelso, False Light Privacy: A Requiem, 32 Santa Clara L.
23      Rev. 783, 785 (1992). The body of Plaintiffs' complaint does 24      almost nothing to elucidate this claim. Although the claim 25      appears to be by all Plaintiffs, only individuals, not 26      corporations, have a right to seek recovery for invasion of 27      privacy. See Clinton Community Hosp. Corp. v. Southern Md.
28      Medical Ctr., 374 F. Supp. 450, 456 (D. Md. 1974), aff'd, 510

1 F.2d 1037 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1048 (1975).
2 Therefore, the district court properly dismissed any such claim
3 asserted by the Corporation.

4 Once again, as we did when discussing Plaintiffs' related 5 defamation claims, we must note that Defendants do not bear the 6 burden to discern how they have defamed Plaintiffs or placed 7 them in a false light. Our review of the complaint discloses 8 no obvious basis for a legally cognizable claim of false light 9 invasion of privacy. Because the tort requires "publicity," 10 the report to the IRS and investigation of or reports regarding 11 Plaintiffs' insurance do not qualify. See, e.g., Hardge-12 Harris, 741 F. Supp. at 776 (reporting suspicion of wrongdoing 13 to appropriate authorities not a basis for false light invasion 14 of privacy claim). With regard to the media coverage of 15 Plaintiffs' planned property development and the report of 16 Andrews' potential suit against the Village, these are matters
17 of public concern and, absent the showing required by New York
18 Times Co. v. Sullivan, cannot be attacked under the false light 19 rubric.

20 The district court was correct in dismissing Plaintiffs'
21 invasion of privacy claim.

22 IV. PRIMA FACIE TORT

23 New Mexico first recognized a cause of action for prima 24 facie tort in Schmitz v. Smentowski, 109 N.M. 386, 394, 785 25 P.2d 726, 734 (1990). The elements of prima facie tort are:
26 (1) defendant's lawful but intentional act; (2) defendant's 27 intent to injure the plaintiff; (3) injury to the plaintiff;
28 and (4) no justification for defendant's acts. Id. at 394, 785

1 P.2d at 734. The purpose of this newly recognized tort is "to 2 provide remedy for intentionally committed acts that do not fit
3 within the contours of accepted torts[.]" Id. at 396, 785 P.2d 4 at 736. Thus, "prima facie tort should not be used to evade 5 stringent requirements of other established doctrines of law."
6 Id. at 398, 785 P.2d at 738; accord Yeittrakis v. Schering-
7 Plough Corp., 804 F. Supp. 238, 249 (D.N.M. 1992) ("Prima facie
8 tort should not be permitted to duplicate, or remedy a defect 9 in, another established cause of action.").

10 "Attempts to use a prima facie tort theory to overcome 11 obstacles to suits for defamation or injurious falsehood have 12 typically failed." Sack & Baron, supra, at 673-74. Thus, it 13 also does not make sense to allow recovery under this new label 14 for expressions that are protected against defamation claims.
15 See National Nutritional Foods Ass'n v. Whelan, 492 F. Supp.
16 374, 384 (S.D.N.Y. 1980); see also James P. Bieg, Prima Facie
17 Tort Comes to New Mexico: A Summary of Prima Facie Tort Law, 21 18 N.M. L. Rev. 327, 369 (1991) ("[I]t would be incongruous to 19 allow prima facie tort to eliminate a requirement or 20 restrictive feature of a traditional tort, such as defamation, 21 which expresses an important public policy--freedom of 22 speech."). In the present case it is clear that prima facie
23 tort is being asserted merely to circumvent the established 24 defenses to defamation.

25 Plaintiffs allege that Stallings provided information he 26 had received from Plaintiffs regarding the Corporation's tax 27 filings to the IRS, which led to an IRS audit. The law, 28 however, does not support recovery in prima facie tort for

1 Defendants' alleged reports to either the IRS or the New Mexico
2 Department of Insurance. See, e.g., Quigley v. Hawthorne
3 Lumber Co., 264 F. Supp. 214, 219 (S.D.N.Y. 1967) (allegations
4 that defendants furnished false reports leading to plaintiff's 5 wrongful arrest insufficient to support prima facie tort 6 claim).

7 With respect to Plaintiffs' complaint regarding 8 Defendants' coverage of Andrews' statements as a Village
9 Councilor and the "high density" development, such coverage
10 cannot be said to be "without justification." It is the role 11 of a newspaper to report newsworthy events.

12 The district court was correct in dismissing Plaintiffs'
13 claim of prima facie tort. See Nazeri v. Missouri Valley 14 College, 860 S.W.2d 303, 316 n.9 (Mo. 1993) (en banc) (although 15 prima facie tort claim is normally not discarded until claim is 16 submitted on another ground, it may be dismissed at pleading
17 stage when claim is clearly being asserted merely to circumvent 18 established law).

19 V. CONCLUSION

20 Defendants' allegedly defamatory statements against 21 Andrews are all either protected opinion under the common law
22 or are within the boundaries of First Amendment protection.
23 Furthermore, we do not find any statements that could 24 legitimately be read as defamatory of either the Corporation or 25 Jill Andrews. Defendants' reports to public authorities
26 regarding their concerns over Plaintiffs' taxes and insurance 27 coverage are insufficient to support claims of intentional 28 infliction of emotional distress, false light invasion of 1 privacy, or prima facie tort.

2 We affirm the dismissal of Plaintiffs' complaint.

1 HARTZ, Judge (Specially Concurring).

2 I concur in the result. I join in Sections II, III, and IV of Judge
3 Black's thorough and thoughtful opinion. I also join in much of Section I.
4 In particular, I agree that a complaint alleging defamation against a public 5 official must be precise regarding (1) what statement in a newspaper article 6 or editorial is false and (2) in what respect the statement is false. As I 7 read the complaint, the alleged problem with the articles and editorials is 8 that they suggested that what happened constituted misconduct by Andrews. But 9 the complaint does not adequately allege that the newspaper either (1) falsely 10 reported what happened or (2) expressed opinions implying the allegation of 11 undisclosed defamatory facts. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 566 (1976).

12 Although I agree with the result, I differ with the opinion in one 13 respect. The opinion gives too little weight to context in determining whether 14 a statement is "of and concerning" an individual.

15 An individual can sue for defamation only if the allegedly defamatory 16 statement is "of and concerning" the individual. See New York Times Co. v.
17 Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 288 (1964). The majority opinion appears to hold that 18 an allegedly libelous statement cannot be "of and concerning" a public official 19 if the statement names only "the village," "the Council," or some other public 20 body, regardless of the nature of the statement or whether the context of the 21 publication establishes that the statement is focused on a particular 22 individual. The majority opinion states: "[W]hen the criticism can 23 legitimately be interpreted as criticism of a government entity, rather than 24 a government official, the First Amendment requires adoption of the former 25 interpretation." Majority Op., ___ N.M. at ___, ___ P.2d at ___. [slip op.
26 at 7]

27 Such a requirement is unnecessary to protect the First Amendment values 28 espoused by the United States Supreme Court and is not required by Supreme

1 Court precedent. Although there may be sound reasons to abolish defamation 2 actions by public officials, "the knowingly false statement and the false 3 statement made with reckless disregard of the truth, do not enjoy 4 Constitutional protection." Garrison v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 75 (1964).
 5 "[T]he use of the known lie as a tool is at once at odds with the premises of 6 democratic government and with the orderly manner in which economic, social, 7 or political change is to be effected." Id. Given this appraisal by the 8 Supreme Court of false defamatory statements made with actual malice, it would 9 be surprising if the Court cloaked such a statement with immunity just because 10 the person making the statement was careful to refer to the defamed individual 11 only by title rather than by proper name.

12 Indeed, the two Supreme Court decisions that address the "of and 13 concerning" requirement—Rosenblatt v. Baer, 383 U.S. 75 (1966) and Sullivan—14 suggest that it is the substance of the criticism (does it focus on government 15 operations or on the individual office holder?) rather than the form (is the 16 individual identified by official title or by proper name?) that matters.

17 Rosenblatt summarized the Supreme Court's position as follows: "[I]n the 18 absence of sufficient evidence that the attack focused on the plaintiff, an 19 otherwise impersonal attack on governmental operations cannot be utilized to 20 establish a libel of those administering the operations." 383 U.S. at 80. The 21 Court was not immunizing all attacks that name only governmental bodies. For 22 example, the Court wrote: "Were the statement at issue in this case an 23 explicit charge that the Commissioners and Baer or the entire Area management 24 were corrupt, we assume without deciding that any member of the identified 25 group might recover." Id. at 81.

26 More importantly, the Supreme Court has made clear that an individual may 27 recover for an accusation naming a public entity if surrounding circumstances 28 establish that the attack was directed at the individual. After all, the

1 statement in Rosenblatt that impersonal attacks are immune from liability is 2 prefaced by the qualification: "in the absence of sufficient evidence that the 3 attack focused on the plaintiff." Thus, Rosenblatt states, "Even if a charge 4 and reference were merely implicit, as is alleged here, but a plaintiff could 5 show by extrinsic proofs that the statement referred to him, it would be no 6 defense to a suit by one member of an identifiable group engaged in 7 governmental activity that another was also attacked." Id. at 81-82.

8 In Rosenblatt one of the Court's two holdings was that the trial court 9 had erred by permitting the jury "to infer both defamatory content and 10 reference from the challenged statement itself, although the statement on its 11 face is only an impersonal discussion of government activity." 383 U.S. at 82.
 12 The article at issue did not mention the plaintiff. If the Supreme Court had 13 adopted the view of the panel majority that a statement is privileged if it 14 "can legitimately be interpreted as criticism of a government entity," then the 15 fact that "the statement on its face is only an impersonal discussion of 16 government activity" should have disposed of the entire Rosenblatt litigation, 17 because a "legitimate interpretation" of the article is that the plaintiff was 18 not being criticized personally. But the Rosenblatt opinion implicitly rejects 19 this view by going on to discuss the plaintiff's "second theory, supported by 20 testimony of several witnesses, . . . that the column was read as referring 21 specifically to him[.]" Id. at 83. (The Court then disposed of this theory 22 by holding that "[e]ven accepting [plaintiff's] reading," id., the verdict must 23 be set aside because the plaintiff may have been a public official yet the jury 24 was not instructed that it must find actual malice. Id. at 83-88.)

25 Sullivan is consistent with Rosenblatt. In Sullivan the Supreme Court 26 was reviewing a jury verdict. The Court's conclusion that the newspaper 27 advertisement criticizing the police was not "of and concerning" Sullivan, the 28 police commissioner, did not rest exclusively on the language of the 1 advertisement, which failed to mention Sullivan by name or official position.

2 The Court wrote: "Although the statements may be taken as referring to the 3 police, they did not on their face make even an oblique reference to [Sullivan] 4 as an individual. Support for the asserted reference must, therefore, be 5 sought in the testimony of [Sullivan's] witnesses." Id. at 289. The Court 6 then proceeded to review that testimony. Id. Such a review would have been 7 totally unnecessary if the Court had adopted the view that the statement is 8 immune from liability if it can be "legitimately interpreted" as not referring 9 to Sullivan personally. The Court would simply have stated that Sullivan had 10 no cause of action because the advertisement could legitimately be interpreted 11 as criticism of the police department rather than as criticism of Sullivan 12 himself.

13 The panel majority's approach is similar to that of the district court 14 opinion reviewed in Saenz v. Playboy Enterprises, 841 F.2d 1309 (7th Cir.
15 1988), aff'g 653 F. Supp. 552 (N.D. Ill. 1987). The appellate court summarized 16 the district court's view as being "that a public official may never establish 17 defamation by innuendo where such inferences must be drawn from allegedly 18 defamatory statements which also render a critical assessment of governmental 19 conduct." Id. at 1314. That view was rejected on appeal. After analyzing 20 Sullivan and Rosenblatt, the Seventh Circuit concluded that the Supreme Court 21 had "recognized that a public official could make out a claim where the 22 allegedly defamatory charges were merely implicit, provided the official 23 demonstrates that the accusations were made of and concerning him." Id. at 24 1316. Based on this authority, I do not believe that we can properly dismiss 25 allegations in the complaint on the ground that they were not "of and 26 concerning" Andrews just because the alleged defamatory statement does not 27 mention Andrews by name, particularly when Andrews is mentioned by name later 28 in the same article or editorial, or even in the same paragraph.

1 I am sympathetic to the panel majority's effort to foreclose any civil 2 action that smacks of a claim for seditious libel. But Sullivan and its 3 progeny have already constructed a mighty fortress against such claims. "A 4 vast difference exists between a government's effort to punish speech critical 5 of official policy or acts, where even truth was no defense, and an official's 6 effort to clear his name of an allegation that he acted contrary to official 7 policy and human decency, in a situation in which he must prove both falsity 8 and actual malice." Sharon v. Time, Inc., 599 F. Supp. 538, 555 (S.D.N.Y.
9 1984). In short, the panel majority has engaged in well-intended overkill.
